CANADIAN LAW REQUIREMENTS

You may be denied access to Canada and ineligible for this trip if you have been convicted of the following:

"Drunk driving or impaired driving convictions (even if they are recorded as a traffic offence) where the blood alcohol reading is 0.081% or above – or a breath reading of 0401mgms/L or above, will make you inadmissible to Canada. While generally less serious in the US, DUI convictions in Canada are much more serious offenses under the Canadian Criminal Code.

Other common convictions that may make a person inadmissible to Canada are: reckless or dangerous driving, common assault, street racing, hinder or resist a police officer in the execution of duty, possession of a banned substance, supply, trafficking of drugs/banned substance (including cannabis) and shoplifting (theft), fraud or criminal damage, to name a few. Some offenses, such as murder, home invasions/burglary, armed robbery, rape, etc., are categorized as Serious Criminality when evaluating Canadian inadmissibility. When such is the case, the decision to grant admission into Canada cannot be made solely by an examining officer, but they must refer the case to a Manager/Supervisor for determination."
